Planning and Housing

Spring/summer 2024

Welcome

---

The Planning and Housing lists at Policy Press strive to find equitable solutions to challenging problems and both are susceptible to constant change. Planning is continually exposed to government cuts and policy shifts which means the systems and profession are under immense pressure. Housing is a politically charged and perpetual issue, made worse by a lack of public housing, unaffordable private housing, increases in poverty and homelessness.

We are proud of these two established subjects and the international reach of our books and series. The scholarship we publish at Policy Press looks at all available evidence to inform the creation of better homes and built environments for all - individuals and communities, in the Global North and the Global South.

We are looking for writers who get to the heart of problems and can clearly communicate their expertise and research to the right audience, whether academics, students or policy makers. If you are interested and have book or series ideas in Planning or Housing, then please do contact our editor Emily Watt:

It's Not Where You Live, It's How You Live

Class and Gender Struggles in a Dublin Estate

John Bissett, community worker, activist and writer

"This brilliant, vividly written and compelling book, drawing on rich vibrant accounts of life on a Dublin housing estate, should be compulsory reading for everyone concerned about growing social class inequalities."

DIANE REAY, UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

This ground-breaking and compelling book takes us deep into the world of a public housing estate in Dublin, showing in fine detail the life struggles of those who live there. The book puts the emphasis on class and gender processes, revealing them to be the crucial dynamics in the lives of public housing residents. The hope is that this understanding can help change perspectives on public housing in a way that diminishes suffering and contributes to human flourishing and well being. Combining long-term research into residents' lived experience with critical realist theory, it provides a completely fresh perspective on public housing in Ireland and, arguably, beyond.

Inhabitation in Nature

Houses, People and Practices

David Clapham, Glasgow University

“David Clapham’s new book provides a judicious overview of some of the major debates in housing studies.”

KEITH JACOBS, UNIVERSITY OF TASMANIA

Rejecting the assumption that housing and cities are separate from nature, David Clapham advances a new research framework that integrates housing with the rest of the natural world. Demonstrating the impact of housing on the non-human environment, the book considers the future direction of inhabitation policies on climate change and biodiversity.

Slow Planning?

Timescapes, Power and Democracy

Mark Dobson and Gavin Parker,
University of Reading

“Essential reading for urban studies researchers and students and a much-needed addition to the existing literature.”

MIKE RACO, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE LONDON

A deep exploration into how questions of time and its organisation affect planning practice, this book questions ‘project speed’: where time to think, deliberate and plan has been squeezed. The authors demonstrate the many benefits of slow planning for the key participants, multiple interests and planning system overall.
