Woke Capitalism

How Corporate Morality is Sabotaging Democracy

Carl Rhodes

Key selling points

- A 'big ideas' book from a leading expert on the politics and ethics of business
- Tackles an issue of public interest which has been animated by high-profile cases such as Nike's adoption of American football player Colin Kaepernick
- Pushes a new perspective on the relationship between capitalism and sociopolitical causes, making a truly innovative book

From Nike's adoption of Colin Kaepernick to Gillette's engagement with the toxic masculinity debate, the 21st century has seen a sharp increase in corporations taking over public morality, a phenomenon which has come to be known as 'woke capitalism'.

Carl Rhodes presents a lively and fascinating history of woke capitalism, from 1950s corporate social responsibility, through 1980s neoliberalism, alongside the adoption and mutation of the term 'woke' from Black American culture, bringing us right up to current-day debates.

Examining the political causes that woke capitalism has adopted, and the social causes that it has not, he argues that this surreptitious extension of capitalism has serious implications for us all.

"This insightful book traces the history and manifestations of 'woke' ideas in relation to big business, capitalism and democracy - reading it will reveal how awake you really are!"

Getting business on board is essential if we want to achieve the United Nations' goal of building a better future for people and the planet by 2030. But the sustainable business agenda can accelerate the problems it's trying to solve.

In Urgent Business, Ian Thomson and Dominic Bates challenge five common myths that trap businesses in an unsustainable black hole and offer a manifesto for change. Combining cutting-edge research with fascinating real-world examples, the authors highlight the practical and holistic steps all businesses can take to play their part in addressing the UN Sustainable Development Goals.

Table of contents

- A successful business isn't just a profitable one
- SMART can be stupid when measuring performance
- Simple solutions can make things worse
- Even the ethical customer isn't always right
- Responsible business leaders still make irresponsible decisions

Urgent Business

Five Myths Business Needs to Overcome to Save Itself - and the Planet

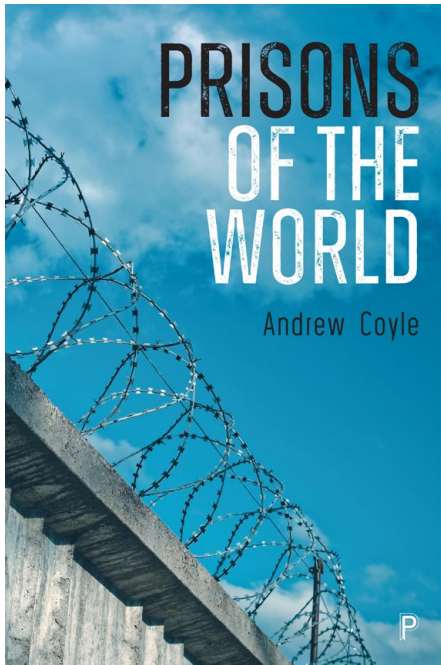

Ian Thomson and Dominic Bates

Key selling points

- Offers a new business model that makes the sustainability case for business, drawing on expert insight from the Lloyds Banking Group Centre for Responsible Business
- Co-authored by a business school professor and a former professional journalist

Ian Thomson is Professor of Accounting and Sustainability and Director of Lloyds Banking Group Centre for Responsible Business at the University of Birmingham.

Prisons of the World

Andrew Coyle

Key selling points

- The first critical discussion of the problems of imprisonment on a worldwide scale
- Offers practical solutions for the future, such as Justice Reinvestment and the Human Development model
- Author is an experienced prison professional and academic of over 50 years who has personally witnessed many of the illustrative examples used

Andrew Coyle is Emeritus Professor of Prison Studies at the University of London. Following a distinguished career as a prison governor, he became founding Director of the International Centre for Prison Studies in King's College London and has spent many years advising national governments and international agencies on prison-related issues in over 70 countries.

How do governments and societies use prison to respond to underlying and fundamental social, economic and political issues?

Using data on world imprisonment and numerous international examples from his personal experience, Coyle discusses the failings of prisons around the world. Acknowledging the influence of external agencies, such as the Committee for the Prevention of Torture, he offers some positive pointers for the future and how there might be a better distribution of resources between criminal justice and social justice by an application of the principles of justice reinvestment.

Table of contents

- The world of prisons
- Prisons of the world
- International centre for prison studies
- Women: The forgotten minority
- The legacy of the Gulag
- European Committee for the Prevention of Torture
- Regional contrasts: Cambodia and Japan
- Latin America: The iron fist or the new model?
- Barbados and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights
- Sub-Saharan Africa: An expensive colonial legacy
- The Jericho Monitoring Mission
- Towards 'a better way'

Policing the Pandemic

How Public Health Becomes Public Order

Lambros Fatsis and Melayna Lamb

Key selling points

- The first book to look at the political nature of policing in relation to COVID-19
- Written from a radical abolitionist perspective in the context of #Blacklivesmatter
- Could aid debates over police violence, making clear links between anti-Black violence in the US and the UK

Lambros Fatsis is a Lecturer in Criminology at the University of Brighton specialising in police racism and the criminalisation of Black music subcultures.

Melayna Lamb is an independent writer and academic based in London and author of the forthcoming A Philosophical History of Police Power published by Bloomsbury Academic.

The COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the inadequacies of the state's response to public health and public order issues through deeply flawed legislation.

Written in the context of the #Blacklivesmatter protests, this book explores why law enforcement responses to a public health emergency are prioritised over welfare provision and what this tells us about the state's criminal justice institutions.

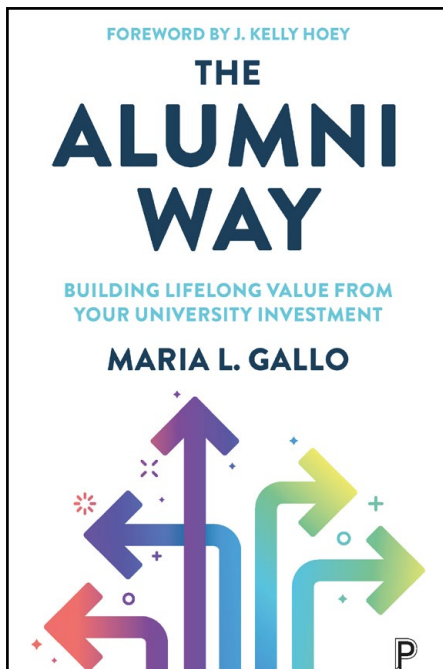

Informing scholarly, civic and activist thinking on the political nature of policing, it reveals how increasing police powers disproportionately affects Black people and suggests alternative ways of designing public safety beyond a law enforcement context.

Table of contents

- Policing "the public" as a virus
- Public health as public order: Odd couple or intimate bedfellows?
- Public safety without police: An abolitionist provocation

"Makes a compelling case for a critical assessment of what the COVID-19 pandemic can tell us about policing, health and governance all of the time. Lively, topical and precisely what we need."

Although higher education in the UK has expanded opportunities for much of the population, in many ways it remains stubbornly elitist.

In order to address this crisis in education, Peter Scott, a leading expert and unique voice, examines the development of mass higher education and proposes a 'radical escape-forward'. He calls for more robust action to secure fair access at all levels and changes in the governance and management at both system and institutional levels to ensure more democratic accountability. Setting out a clear and radical programme for reform, this book makes an important contribution to current debates in education in the context of the evolution of the UK economy and wider society.

Table of contents

- A 'general crisis'?
- 'Post-war' and post-millennium
- The development of higher education
- Themes and transformations
- Higher education today
- A further gaze
- The United Kingdom in the 21st century
- COVID-19 emergency and market experiment
- What is to be done?

Retreat or Resolution?

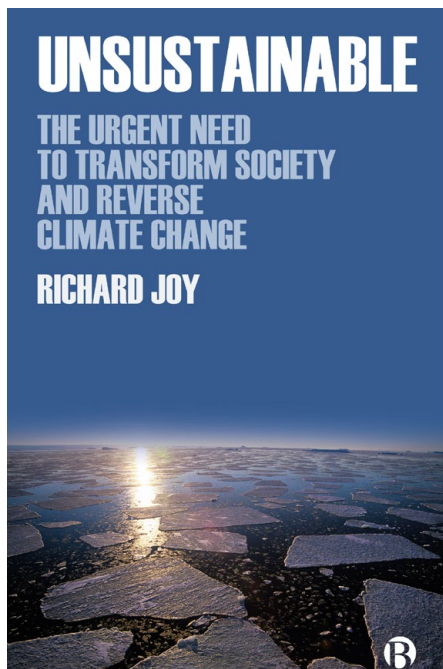

Tackling the Crisis of Mass Higher Education

Peter Scott

Key selling points

- Examines the development of mass higher education in the context of the evolution of the UK state and economy and wider society
- Sets out a radical programme for reform, such as tougher targets for achieving fair access and introducing a stronger democratic element into university governance

Peter Scott is Emeritus Professor of Higher Education at the UCL Institute of Education. He has worked as a journalist and an academic and is currently Commissioner for Fair Access for the Scottish government. Former Vice Chancellor of Kingston University, Peter Scott was knighted in 2007 for services to education.

Richard Joy is actively involved in environmental politics and during 2019–2020 he worked with a task force advising on policy options for green growth, headed by leader of the Liberal Democrats, Sir Ed Davey. He founded The Low Carbon Strategy Network to support organisations and collaborate on sustainability initiatives.

This book is an urgent call to reimagine our social, political and economic systems so that we might transform to a sustainable society.

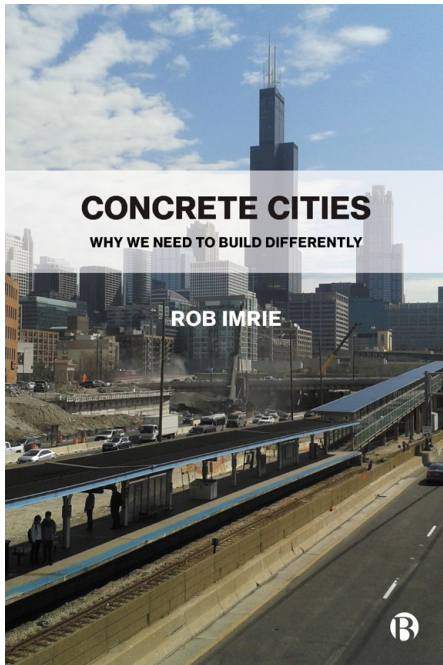

It considers whether an alternative economic model is possible and examines the factors needed to enable such a transition to occur. The scale and pace of change is unprecedented and the author examines the actions needed by governments, business and individuals if we are to address the environmental disaster that confronts us. Much needs to change but ultimately, this is a book of hope, believing that evolution to a better, more sustainable society is possible.

“As a passionate environmentalist, Richard’s powerful analysis reinforces the wicked problem we face to save our planet, and challenges us all to step up and make the sacrifices required.”

Jonathan Ager CBE, British Antarctic Survey

“This book helps wake our species up from being hypnotised by admiration of ourselves!”

Sir Tim Smit, co-founder of The Eden Project

Concrete Cities Why We Need to Build Differently

Rob Imrie

Key selling points

- Calls for the end of construction as we know it and for a better human-and environment-focused system of building
- Uses global case studies from India, China and USA (particularly California), India, Japan, Spain and Latin America, particularly Brazil and Mexico
- Author is well respected in geography, sociology and planning studies and writes in a jargon-free style

Planning and Housing

Rob Imrie was previously Professor of Sociology at Goldsmiths, University of London and retains a visiting professorship there. He has published widely on issues relating to architecture, urban design and urban politics and regeneration.

Global rights available

This accessible critique of urban construction reimagines city development and life in an era of unprecedented building.

Exploring the proliferation of building and construction, Imrie sets out its many degrading impacts on both people and the environment. Using examples from around the world, he illustrates how construction is motivated by economic and political ideologies rather than actual need, and calls for a more sensitive, humane and nature-focused culture of construction.

This compelling book calls for radical changes to city living and environments by building less, but better.

“An exciting book weaving a radically novel and critical narrative thread through landscapes of construction excess. Against the all-consuming backdrop of the present ‘build back better’ debate, Imrie’s central message – that we need to build less but better – could not be more timely.”

Wildlife Criminology

Angus Nurse and Tanya Wyatt

New in paperback.

The concept of wildlife criminology reaches new boundaries in this illuminating new study of exploitation of animals and its social implications. Reviewing harms like exploitation and trade, blood sports and wildlife as food, it considers the rights of animals as sentient beings and the impact of crimes on inter-human attitudes and violence.

“As awareness of the harmful consequences of human activities on the Earth becomes increasingly urgent, Wildlife Criminology offers an original and timely reflection on a complex, and too often overlooked, topic.”

Anita Lavorgna, University of Southampton

Reparations and Anti-Black Racism

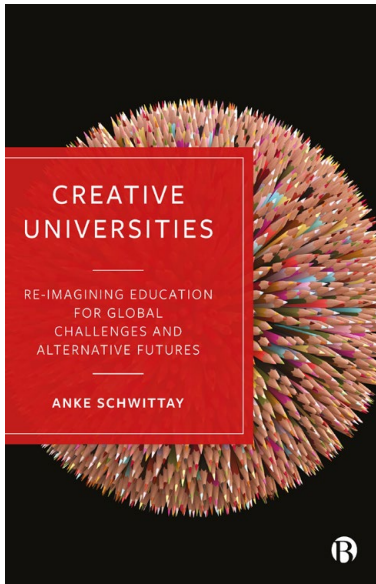

A Criminological Exploration of the Harms of Slavery and Racialised Injustice

Angus Nurse

Police shootings and incarceration inequalities are two examples of the legacy of slavery in the US and UK. Offering a criminological exploration of the case for slavery and anti-Black racism reparations in the context of enduring harms and differential treatment of Black citizens, this book refutes the policy perspectives that oppose reparations.

“In his timely book, Angus Nurse convincingly demonstrates that reparations are the logical response to institutionalized anti-Black racism.”

Reimagining Education for Global Challenges and Alternative Futures

Anke Schwittay

In this wide-ranging book, Anke Schwittay argues that, in order to inspire and equip students to generate better responses to global challenges, we need a new higher education pedagogy that develops their imagination, creativity, emotional sensibilities and practical capabilities.

“Schwittay argues for the creation of alternative educational and social futures through the design of new learning environments; the development of student curiosity, introspection and imagination; prototyping activities and the taking of creative risks. This is a timely, important and optimistic book – a conceptual and practical antidote to the challenges of our times.”

Understanding Mental Distress Knowledge, Practice and Neoliberal Reform in Community Mental Health Services

Rich Moth

In this timely analysis, Rich Moth assesses mental health services in a period of major change.

Based on extended fieldwork in community mental health services, he explores the many impacts of policy reform, marketisation and austerity on NHS mental health provision, and positions developments in the contexts of neoliberalism and an increased emphasis on individual responsibility.

Firmly rooted in the lived experiences of people using mental health services, and the social workers, nurses and psychiatrists delivering them, this is a stimulating perspective on understandings of and responses to mental distress within this organisational setting.

Long-Term Recovery from Substance Use European Perspectives

Sarah Galvani, Alastair Roy and Amanda Clayson

In this much-needed text, leading international experts explore crucial aspects of people's experience of long-term recovery from substance use. Centred around the voices of people who use substances, the book examines the complex and continuing needs of people who have sought to change their use of substances, investigating the ways in which personal characteristics and social and systemic factors intersect to influence the lives of people in long-term recovery. With perspectives from Sweden, Norway, Germany, Belgium, Iceland and the UK, it also considers the role and needs of family members, and puts forward clear recommendations for improving future research, policy and practice.

Implementing Citizenship, Nationality and Integration Policies The UK and Belgium in Comparative Perspective

Djordje Sredanovic

In this incisive analysis, Sredanovic compares and contrasts the experiences of citizenship and integration policies in the UK and Belgium.

In-depth interviews with officials illuminate both the everyday application of approaches to citizenship and integration, and their evolution in recent years. By examining the levels of discretion that exist within the two countries' systems, the book explores the variations within the implementation processes.

The first comparative work of its kind, this book goes beyond the analysis of legislation to explore how citizenship and integration policies are applied on the frontline.
